Structured predation management programme should be in place for February jackal breeding

The presence of predators on the farm should be monitored continuously. It is essential to have an excellent knowledge of the farm, as well as the areas where predators are generally found. This continuous monitoring usually focuses on the life cycles of the various predators. For example, in the case of the black-backed jackal, it is very important to detect their breeding holes and manage them professionally, especially in August. Another important time of the year is February, when young jackal from outside the farm's borders are looking for new homes. During these periods in particular, the farmer should schedule his time well in order to control and manage predators; in other words, a structured predation management programme should be in place.

Read more about Integrated Predation Management in the recently launched Predation Management manual, the farmer's one-stop guide to identifying and managing predators, which appears on the PMF website.
